In Snowdonia there is a national park, the national park covers some 823 square miles and extends inland from the coast between Penmaenmawr and Caernarfon.

Access to the most popular part of this area including Snowdon itself is made easier by the Snowdon Mountain Railway, which starts at Llanberis, Britain's highest visitor centre.

Llanberis is at the base of mount Snowdon, a variety of well-marked trails branch out and enable visitors to become acquainted with the scenery flora and fauna and geology of the region.

There is Snowdon Mountain Railway nearby too, this amazing narrow gauge railway opened in 1896 and trundles along the nearby five mile route up to the summit of Mount Snowdon at a top speed of little more than five miles per hour.

The fun Llanberis lake Railway is a historic narrow-gauge steam train which will take you on a 40-mile trip.

The national slate museum was built in the mid 1800's, this vast wheel spans an impressive 50 feet in diameter. The museum offers a fascinating insight into an industry that did much to shape Wales and its people. The old Victorian workshops are still in place, while talks and demonstrations illuminated how slate was quarried and split before being shipped around the world.
